Personal Statement

Why I am interested in IIMK BMS Programme?
(Write a personal statement of 500 - 600 words explaining your interest in the programme, your motivation to pursue the course, and how it alligns with your Career aspirations. Discuss why IIMK's approach and values resonate with you)?

I first became curious about business by watching my mother. She runs a clothing boutique since 27 years, and growing up, I absorbed the rhythm of retail without realising it - how she handled customers, managed inventory, made decisions on the fly. By the time I was fourteen, I did not just want to observe business anymore. I wanted to build one. That is how Lalnaa started. My mother and I co-founded a small handcrafted clothing brand after a research trip to Karnataka, where I met Lambani embroidery artisans - families carrying generations of extraordinary craft, but with no way to reach the people who would value it. We wanted to bridge that gap. In the early days, I was doing everything: designing, pricing, branding, figuring things out as I went. Over time, I took over marketing and e-commerce. I taught myself SEO through Google's Digital Marketing and E-Commerce certification, spent late nights learning how Meta ads actually work, and built an online store with over 200 products. Today, we work with 15 artisans - most of them women - and engage a digital community of more than 3,000 people. Alongside Lalnaa, I have also helped women-owned businesses in my community grow through packaging, social media, and digital outreach. What surprised me was not just that I could do it, but that I genuinely loved it. I started enjoying the act of selling, the challenge of organising operations, the satisfaction of leading a small team - not as obligations, but as things I looked forward to. This was not a career chosen from a list of options. It was confirmed through years of hands-on work. But here is what I have also come to accept: most of what I have built so far has been intuition. I have made things work without fully understanding why certain strategies succeeded and others did not. I want that clarity, and that is exactly why I want to pursue the BMS programme at IIM Kozhikode. What draws me to IIMK's BMS is how well it matches the kind of learner I already am - someone who learns best when theory meets practice. The programme's interdisciplinary structure, with a core Major in Management and the flexibility to pursue stackable minors, is something I find genuinely exciting. A minor in Marketing, Sales, and Digital Promotion would directly strengthen the skills I have been building on my own, while a minor in Economics and Public Policy could help me better understand the systemic challenges faced by artisan communities like the ones I work with. The fact that the programme also includes a research component and the opportunity to graduate with an Honours with Research degree matters to me - I want to move beyond instinct and actually study the intersection of business and social impact with academic rigour. I do not come to this programme looking for direction. I come knowing exactly what I want to build and why. What I need now is the knowledge, the frameworks, and the environment to do it properly - and I believe IIMK's is where that begins.

Personal and Professional Goals

My goals did not come from a career counsellor or an aptitude test. They came from watching my mother run a boutique for twenty-seven years, from meeting artisans in Karnataka who were abandoning their craft to work in mines, and from realising- slowly, then all at once- that business can either extract from people or lift them up. I have chosen the latter, and everything I want to do going forward is built around that conviction. In the short term, my primary goal is to build a strong academic foundation in management. I have spent the last two and a half years running Lalnaa, the handcrafted clothing brand I co-founded with my mother, and I have learned a great deal- but most of it has been through trial and error. I taught myself SEO, ran advertising campaigns that failed before they worked, and figured out supply chains with artisans who had never engaged with the modern marketplace. I have made things work, but I do not always understand why. I want to change that. I want to study marketing strategy, consumer behaviour, operations, and finance with the kind of depth that turns instinct into informed decision-making. I also want to deepen my involvement in education and mentorship. Over the past two years on Schoolhouse.world, I have tutored over 300 students from 57 countries, moderated a community of 100,000 learners, and built programmes that helped hundreds of learners. This work is personal to me. I grew up in a single-parent household where opportunities were never guaranteed, and every door that opened for me opened because someone- my mother, a tutor-made it possible. I want to keep being that person for others, and I want to do it more effectively as I grow. In the long term, I want to build Lalnaa into something much larger than what it is today. Right now, we work with Lambani embroidery artisans and handloom weavers. I want to expand to other craft communities across India, create stable employment for more women artisans, and develop a model that other social enterprises can learn from. Beyond Lalnaa, I want to use entrepreneurship as a tool to support disadvantaged communities more broadly- whether through helping women-run businesses scale digitally, as I have already started doing, or through initiatives that connect skilled but overlooked workers to the markets that need them. What I've realised is that good intentions alone are not enough- impact requires structure, strategy, and scalability. The IIMK programme fits into my journey by helping me see social impact as a system through its interdisciplinary curriculum, research opportunities, and exposure to diverse perspectives. I am not starting from zero. I have a business, a community, and a clear sense of purpose. What I need now is the education to match my ambitions- and I believe this programme is exactly that.
